H The appellants were charged at the Sessions Court for using as genuine a forged document, namely Form 14A of the National Land Code ('NLC'), an offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code ('PC'). Following a trial, the appellants were convicted for the offence and punished under s. 467 of the PC; the appellants were each sentenced to nine years' imprisonment. The appellants' appeal to the High Court bore no success as their convictions and I sentences were affirmed. On appeal, the Court of Appeal maintained the appellants' conviction but reduced their imprisonment term, from nine years to six years. The appellants filed the present motion, to the Court of Appeal, for a revision of its own decision which was decided by a different panel. The question of law that arose was whether the punishment for the conviction of the offence in s. 471 should be under s. 465 instead of s. 467 of the PC, as stated in the charge. Essentially, the appellants' complaint was that they had been convicted and sentenced under a defective charge and, accordingly, the sentence imposed on them was wrong and illegal in law.

Held (dismissing revision)
Per Choo Kah Sing JCA delivering the judgment of the court:

(1) The document in question, Form 14A of the First Schedule of the NLC, was indeed a false document within the meaning of s. 464 of the PC. The forged document was an instrument which was capable of transferring and creating a legal right, ie, a proprietary right in land under s. 215 of the NLC. Hence, this forged document fell within the meaning of a 'valuable security' under the PC. Section 30 of the PC explained 'valuable security' and based on the definition provided, the forged document was a valuable security and, therefore, fell within a specific class of document under s. 467 of the PC. The prosecution did not charge the appellants for forging the document under s. 467; they were instead charged for committing the offence of s. 471 of the PC. The difference in those two offences is that s. 467 deals with a person who forges the false document/forged document, while s. 471 deals with a person who fraudulently or dishonestly used as genuine any document, as defined in s. 29 of the PC, which he knows or has reason to believe to be a forged document. (paras 19-22)

(2) There are two key words to determine which is the punishment section to be applied for the offence in s. 471 of the PC. The first key word is '… forged', which is expressed in the form of a verb, found at the end of the section. There are only two provisions that mention the word 'forges' a document, namely ss. 466 and 467 of the PC. However, one may construe the phrase 'makes any false document' found in s. 463 of the PC, which the punishment section is found in s. 465 of the PC, to mean the forging of a document for the purpose of the phrase 'as if he had forged such document' in s. 471. Therefore, there are three relevant punishment sections to be considered for the offence in s. 471 of the PC. Which section would be the appropriate section to apply as the punishment section? This led to the consideration of the second key wording. The second key wordings are 'such document' at the end of the section. Therefore, it was incumbent upon the prosecution to look at the document in question. If such document, ie, the false document or forged document is found to be a document pertaining to a public record or court document, then the punishment section to be applied is s. 466 of the PC. If such document is found to be a document that falls within

A the specified classes of documents in s. 467, then the punishment section to be applied is s. 467 of the PC. If such document could not be found in either section, ie, ss. 466 or 467, then the punishment section to be applied is s. 465 of the PC. (paras 24-26)

B (3) In the present case, the punishment provision in s. 466 of the PC could not be applied simply because the forged document was not a document pertaining to a public record or court document. The forged document was a 'valuable security' which fell within one of the specific classes of documents in s. 467 and therefore, the punishment provision in s. 467 of the PC should apply. The court could not agree with the appellants' C submission that the punishment provision should be s. 465, instead of s. 467 of the PC. The reason was simply because even if the phrase 'makes any false document' in s. 463 be construed to mean the same as the phrase 'as if he had forged such document' in s. 471, the punishment in s. 465 still could not be be used as there is a specific punishment D section for the forged document in question, ie, a valuable security, which is within a specific class of documents in s. 467 of the PC. (paras 27 & 28)

(4) The punishment section for the offence under s. 471 of the PC would depend on the nature of the document that was used as a genuine E document. If the document in question falls within those documents mentioned in s. 466, then the punishment in s. 466 shall be applicable. Likewise, if the document in question falls within those specific classes of documents in s. 467, then the punishment in s. 467 shall be applicable. If the document in question does not fall within either F ss. 466 or 467, then the appropriate punishment section would be s. 465 by interpretation of the phrase 'makes a false document' in s. 463 to include the forging of a document within the phrase 'as if he had forged such document' in s. 471 of the PC. The charge in the present case was properly framed and was not defective, wrong or illegal in law. The impugned decision was maintained as the correct decision of the Court G of Appeal. JUDGMENT

Choo Kah Sing JCA:

Introduction

[1] On 9 February 2024, the Court of Appeal allowed a motion (hereafter 'the motion') filed by the appellants via B-06-3-12-2023 for a revision of its decision dated 10 July 2023 (hereafter 'the impugned decision') which was decided by a different panel of Justices of the Court of Appeal.

[2] On 18 April 2018, the Sessions Court convicted the appellants of committing an offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code, and they were punished under s. 467 of the Penal Code. The appellants were sentenced to nine years imprisonment. The appellants appealed to the High Court. On 4 July 2019, the High Court affirmed the conviction and the sentence.

[3] On appeal to the Court of Appeal, the appeal was allowed in part. On 10 July 2023, the Court of Appeal allowed the nine-year imprisonment term to be reduced to six years but maintained the conviction finding.

[4] On 18 December 2023, the appellants filed the motion to review the impugned decision. The motion was granted, but the review was only in relation to the question of law raised by the appellants which was "whether the punishment for the conviction of the offence in s. 471 of the Penal Code should be s. 465, instead of s. 467 as stated in the charge" (hereafter "the question of law").

[5] The question of law is now before us. This court will confine its review exercise only to the question of law. Although the appellants were permitted to raise issues in the review, those issues must be confined and relevant to the question of law.

[8] The first appellant was tried under case No. MSJ6-62K-111-11-2016. The second appellant was tried under case No. MSJ6-62K-112-11-2016. Both cases were tried together at the Sessions Court of Shah Alam.
H

[9] The appellants did not raise the question of law at the trial court, High Court and the Court of Appeal (in the previous appeal), and it was raised for the first time in the motion. The Court of Appeal that heard the motion found the question of law to be novel and decided that the question of law ought
I to be ventilated fully.

The Question Of Law – Whether The Punishment For The Conviction Of The Offence In s. 471 Penal Code Should Be s. 465, Instead Of s. 467 As Stated In The Charge

[10] Essentially, the appellants' complaint is that they have been convicted and sentenced under a defective charge. The appellants' counsel submitted that the charge was defective, wrong, and illegal in law because for an offence charge under s. 471 of the Penal Code, the punishment section ought to be s. 465, and it was not s. 467.

[11] Further, the sentence imposed on the appellants was also wrong and illegal in law, the appellants' counsel submitted. The punishment under s. 465 of the Penal Code is imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years or a fine or both. Whereas, the punishment under s. 467 is imprisonment for a term which may extend to 20 years and a fine. As such, the appellants' counsel submitted that the appellants could not be punished with an imprisonment sentence that exceeded the two years as stated in s. 465 of the Penal Code.

[12] In the event the appellants' counsel's submission is correct, then the legality of the sentence imposed, ie, six years imprisonment (as reduced by the Court of Appeal) and the charge could be questioned, ie, it could be a defective charge.

Analysis And Findings Of This Court

[13] Chapter XVIII of the Penal Code (from ss. 463 to 489D) deals with criminal offences relating to documents, currency notes and bank notes. In our present case, the criminal offence is related to only documents. For ease of reference, the relevant sections of the law pertaining to the present case are reproduced below:

> 463 Forgery
> Whoever makes any false document or part of a document with intent to cause damage or injury to the public or to any person, or to support any claim or title, or to cause any person to part with property, or to enter into any express or implied contract, or with intent to commit fraud or that fraud may be committed, commits forgery

(b) who without lawful authority, dishonestly or fraudulently, by cancellation or otherwise, alters a document in any material part thereof, after it has been made or executed either by himself for by any other person, whether such person be living or dead at the time of such alteration; or

(c) who dishonestly or fraudulently causes any person to sign, seal, execute or alter a document, knowing that such person by reason of unsoundness of mind or intoxication cannot, or that by reason of deception practised upon him he does not, know the contents of the document or the nature of the alteration.

(a) A has a letter of credit upon B for ringgit 1,000 written by Z. A in order to defraud B, adds a cypher to the 1,000, and makes the sum 10,000, intending that it may be believed by B that Z so wrote the letter. A has committed forgery.

(b) A, without Z's authority, affixes Z's seal to a document, purporting to be a conveyance of an estate from Z to A, with the intention of selling the estate to B, and thereby of obtaining from B the purchase money. A has committed forgery.

(c) A picks up a cheque on a banker signed by B, payable to bearer, but without any sum having been inserted in the cheque. A fraudulently fills up the cheque by inserting the sum of one thousand ringgit. A commits forgery.

(d) A leaves with B his agent, a cheque on a banker, signed by A, without inserting the sum payable, and authorizes B to fill up the cheque by inserting a sum not exceeding one thousand ringgit for the purpose of making certain payments. B fraudulently fills up the cheque by inserting the sum of ten thousand. B commits forgery.

(e) A draws a bill of exchange on himself in the name of B without B's authority, intending to discount it as a genuine bill with a banker, and intending to take up the bill on its maturity. Here, as A draws the bill with intent to deceive the banker by leading him to suppose that he had the security of B, and thereby to discount the bill, A is guilty of forgery.

(f) Z's will contains these words: "I direct that all my remaining property be equally divided between A, B and C". A dishonestly scratches out B's name, intending that it may be believed that the whole was left to himself and C. A has committed forgery.

(g) A endorses a promissory note and makes it payable to Z, or his order, by writing on the bill the words "Pay to Z, or his order", and signing the endorsement. B dishonestly erases the words "Pay to Z, or his order", and thereby converts the special endorsement into a blank endorsement. B commits forgery.

(h) A sells and conveys an estate to Z. A after wards, in order to defraud Z of his estate, executes a conveyance of the same estate to B, dated six months earlier than the date of the conveyance to Z, intending it to be believed that he had conveyed the estate to B before he conveyed it to Z. A has committed forgery.

(i) Z dictates his will to A. A intentionally writes down a different legatee from the legatee named by Z, and by representing to Z that he has prepared the will according to his instruction, induces Z to sign the will. A has committed forgery.

(j) A writes a letter and sign sit with B's name without B's authority, certifying that A is a man of good character and in distressed circumstances from unforeseen misfortune, intending by means of such letter to obtain alms from Z and other persons. Here, as A made a false document in order to induce Z to part with property, A has committed forgery.

(k) A without B's authority writes a letter and signs it in B's name, certifying to A's character, intending there by to obtain employment under Z. A has committed forgery, inasmuch as he intended to deceive Z by the forged certificate, and thereby to induce Z to enter into an express or implied contract for service.

Explanation 1 - A man's signature of his own name may amount of forgery.

ILLUSTRATIONS

(a) A signs his own name to a bill of exchange, intending that it may be believed that the bill was drawn by another person of the same name. A has committed forgery.

(b) A writes the word "accepted" on a piece of paper and signs it with Z's name, in order that B may afterwards write on the paper a bill of exchange drawn by B upon Z, and negotiate the bill as though it had been accepted by Z. A is guilty of forgery; and if B knowing the fact draws the bill upon the paper pursuant to A's intention, B is also guilty of forgery.

(c) A picks up a bill of exchange payable to the order of a different person of the same name. A endorses the bill in his own name, intending to cause it to be believed that it was endorsed by the person to whose order it was payable: here A has committed forgery.

(d) A purchases an estate sold under execution of a decree against B. B after the seizure of the estate, in collusion with Z, executes a lease of the estate to Z at a nominal rent and for a long period, and dates the lease six months prior to the seizure with intent to defraud A, and to cause it to be believed that the lease was granted before the seizure. B, though he executes the lease in his own name, commits forgery by antedating it.

A (e) A, a trader, in anticipation of insolvency, lodges effects with B for A's benefit, and with intent to defraud his creditors, and in order to give a colour to the transaction, writes a promissory note, binding himself to pay to B a sum for value received, and antedates the note, intending that it may be believed to have been made before A was on the point of insolvency. A has committed forgery under the first head of the definition.

Explanation 2 - The making of a false document in the name of a fictitious person, intending it to be believed that the document was made by a real person, or in the name of a deceased person, intending it to be believed that the document was made by the person in his lifetime, may amount to forgery.

[14] The nub of the revision is not concerned with the question whether the ingredients of the offence for which the appellants have been convicted have been proven, rather, the question is: What is the correct punishment section to be imposed or applied for a conviction of the offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code?

General Provisions Of Forgery – Whoever Makes Any False Document

[15] Generally, the offence section of committing forgery in relation to a document ("document" as defined in s. 29 of the Penal Code) is found in s. 463 of the Penal Code. It states "whoever makes any false document … commits forgery." It follows with ss. 464(a) to (c) explaining those situations that could be construed as making a false document. The punishment section for committing forgery is found in s. 465 of the Penal Code. Therefore, if a person is charged under s. 463, upon conviction, he could be punished under s. 465 of the Penal Code which the punishment is imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years or a fine or both.

[16] After the general provisions vis-à-vis ss. 463, 464 and 465 of the Penal Code that deal with the commission of an offence of forgery, the Penal Code goes on to criminalise the act of forging certain specific classes of documents. Those sections are ss. 466 and 467 of the Penal Code.

Whoever Forges Certain Specific Classes Of Documents

[17] Section 466 deals with forging public records and court documents. Section 467 deals with forging a valuable security or a will, or an authority to adopt a son, or purporting to give authority to any person to make or transfer any valuable security and etc. Sections 466 and 467 are specific offences dealing with forging specific classes of documents, and the punishment section is imbued within the same offence section.

[18] The punishment for a conviction under s. 466 is imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years and a fine. Whereas, the punishment for the conviction under s. 467, as mentioned earlier, is imprisonment for a term which may extend to twenty years and a fine. For both offences, other than establishing the ingredients in s. 463 and 464, there is an extra ingredient to establish, namely, the false document must be one of the classes of documents specified in the section charged.

[19] In the present case, the document (exh. P41A) in question was a Form 14A (hereafter "the forged document") of the First Schedule of the National Land Code (hereafter "the NLC"). It had been established in the trial that the document (exh. P41A) in question was indeed a false document within the meaning of s. 464 of the Penal Code. Section 470 of the Penal Code explains that a false document that is made wholly or partly by forgery is designated a forged document.

[20] The forged document in the present case is an instrument which is capable of transferring and creating a legal right, ie, a proprietary right, in land under s. 215 of the NLC. Hence, this forged document falls within the meaning of "valuable security" document under the Penal Code. Section 30 of the Penal Code explains "valuable security" as follows:

> 30 "Valuable security"
> The words "valuable security" denote a document which is, or purports to be, a document whereby any legal right is created, extended, transferred, restricted, extinguished, or released, or whereby any person acknowledges that he lies under the legal liability, or has not a certain legal right.
> ILLUSTRATION
> A writes his name on the back of a bill of exchange. As the effect of this endorsement is to transfer the right to the bill to any person who may become the lawful holder of it, the endorsement is a "valuable security".

[21] Based on the above definition section, the forged document is a valuable security, and therefore falls within a specified class of document under s. 467 of the Penal Code.

[22] The Public Prosecutor did not charge the appellants for forging the forged document under s. 467, instead they were charged for committing the offence of s. 471. The difference in these two offences is that s. 467 deals with a person who forges the false document/forged document, whereas, s. 471 deals with a person who fraudulently or dishonestly uses as genuine any document (as defined in s. 29 of the Penal Code) which he knows or has reason to believe to be a forged document.

[23] Section 471 states as follows (emphasis added):

> 471 Using as genuine a forged document
> Whoever fraudulently or dishonestly uses as genuine any document which he knows or has reason to believe to be a forged document, shall be punished in the same manner as if he had forged such document.

Section 471 does not have an imbued punishment provision. However, it provides that the person convicted "shall be punished in the same manner as if he had forged such document." The law states "punished in the same manner as if he had forged such document." It is clear that a person who fraudulently or dishonestly uses a false document/forged document will be punished as if he had forged such document.

[24] There are two key words to determine which is the punishment section to be applied for the offence in s. 471 of the Penal Code. A

[25] The first key word is "... forged", which is expressed in the form of a verb, found at the end of the section. There are only two provisions that mention the word "forges" a document, namely s. 466 and s. 467. However, one may construe the phrase "makes any false document" found in s. 463, which the punishment section is found in s. 465, to mean the forging of a document for the purpose of the phrase "as if he had forged such document" in s. 471. Therefore, there are three relevant punishment sections to be considered for the offence in s. 471 of the Penal Code. Which section would be the appropriate section to apply as the punishment section? This leads to the consideration of the second key wording. B C

[26] The second key wording is "such document" at the end of the section. Therefore, it is incumbent upon the Public Prosecutor to look at the document in question. If such document, ie, the false document or forged document, is found to be a document pertaining to a public record or court document, then the punishment section to be applied is s. 466 of the Penal Code. If such document is found to be a document that falls within the specified classes of documents in s. 467, then the punishment section to be applied is s. 467 of the Penal Code. If such document could not be found in either section (s. 466 or s. 467), then the punishment section to be applied is s. 465 of the Penal Code. D E

[27] In the present case, the punishment provision in s. 466 could not be applied simply because the forged document is not a document pertaining to a public record or court document. As explained earlier, the forged document is a "valuable security" which falls within one of the specific classes of documents in s. 467, therefore, the punishment provision in s. 467 should apply. F

[28] This court could not agree with the appellants' counsel's submission that the punishment provision should be s. 465, instead of s. 467 of the Penal Code. The reason is simply because even if the phrase "makes any false document" in s. 463 be construed to mean the same as the phrase "as if he had forged such document" in s. 471, the punishment in s. 465 still could not be used, as there is a specific punishment section for the forged document in question, ie, a valuable security, which is within a specific class of documents in s. 467 of the Penal Code. G H

[29] Based on the above analysis, it could be surmised as follows. If a person is charged for fraudulently or dishonestly using as genuine any document which he knows or has reason to believe to be forged under s. 471, the punishment sections could be s. 465, s. 466 or s. 467. If the forged document is a public document within the meaning of s. 466, the punishment section is s. 466. If the forged document falls within the specified classes of I documents in s. 467, then the punishment section is s. 467. If the forged document does not fall within s. 466 or s. 467, then the punishment section ought to be s. 465 by virtue of the interpretation of the phrase "makes any false document" in s. 463 (read together with s. 464) to mean forgery of a document for the purpose of the phrase "as if he had forged such document" in s. 471.

[30] It has to be clarified that although the punishment provision for s. 471 could be either one of the sections mentioned above, that does not mean that if the Public Prosecutor opted to rely on that punishment section, the Public Prosecutor is then required to establish all the ingredients of that offence section as well. The required ingredients to be established are those ingredients in s. 471, not those in the punishment provision. Therefore, the Public Prosecutor need not prove it was the appellants who forged or made the forged document. All that is required from the Public Prosecutor is to establish that the accused fraudulently or dishonestly used the forged document as genuine (which they knew or had reason to believe was a forged document).

[31] It is trite law that the Public Prosecutor has vast power to institute a criminal proceeding, including to select the offence to be charged, under s. 376(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act 593) read together with art. 145(3) of the Federal Constitution. Therefore, in the present case, the Public Prosecutor had opted to charge the appellants for using a forged document, and that forged document falls within one of the specific classes of documents in s. 467, therefore, the charge and the punishment section were properly framed within the ambit of the law.

Other Issues Raised By The Appellants' Counsel

[32] The appellants' counsel submitted that the combining of two separate and distinct offences that involved different elements into one charge has resulted in the charge being illegal or tantamount to duplicity. This submission is misconceived. As explained above, the ingredients needed to be established are only those within s. 471 of the Penal Code. The ingredients are (i) fraudulent or dishonest use of a document as genuine; and (ii) knowledge or reasonable belief on the part of the accused using the document that it is a forged document. Of course, the document that was used by the accused has to be established to be a false document or a forged document. It is wrong for the appellants' counsel to submit that there is a requirement for the Public Prosecutor to establish all the ingredients of the offence in s. 467 as well. As long as the false document concerned falls within the specific classes of documents mentioned in s. 467, it would suffice for the Public Prosecutor to rely on the punishment provision stated in s. 467.

[33] The law allows s. 471 to be read with the relevant punishment provision in another offence section. Therefore, it could not be said that the charge was illegally framed or that the charge was tainted by duplicity. If Parliament had intended the punishment for a conviction under s. 471 to be limited to s. 465, Parliament would have explicitly said the punishment section is s. 465. Parliament has left the punishment in s. 471 open for the Public Prosecutor to choose the appropriate punishment section by the use of the phrase "as if he had forged such document."

[34] The appellants' counsel also argued that forgery was not established. This court finds this submission was inaptly raised at the revision hearing. As stated earlier, this court is only concerned with whether the punishment provision in s. 467 could be applied to an offence under s. 471. The appellants' counsel should have raised this argument at the appeal before the High Court or in the previous appeal at the Court of Appeal, not at this juncture. Notwithstanding what has been said, this Court observes that the trial judge did make a finding of fact that the Form 14A (exh. P41A) was a forged document after having evaluated the evidence of SP1 (the complainant), SP9 (the chemist who prepared the chemist report (P37)) and SP7 (the complainant's wife).

[35] The appellants' counsel relied on several cases below to support the contention that where a case is charged under s. 471, the punishment section is not under s. 467. In Chung Onn v PP [2010] 6 CLJ 211, HC, wherein the High Court held as follows:

> [13] Coming to the matter at hand a literal and proper reading of s. 471 shows that the person using a forged document shall be punished in the same manner as if he had forged the document. A careful reading of this provision show (sic) using a forged document does not equate it to forging the document but merely equate it to forging the document for purposes of sentencing. No presumption or inference arises in this provision that in using a forged document the person is said to have forged the document.
> [14] Section 467 on the other hand starts off with the phrase 'Whoever forges a document'. To me therefore there is no nexus between s. 471 and s. 467 of the Penal Code. Both the provisions must be read separately and putting both the provisions together is tantamount to a misjoinder and falls foul of s. 163 of the Criminal Procedure Code which provides that for every distinct offence there shall be a separate charge.

[36] This court is of the considered view that the learned High Court judge had misunderstood the application of s. 467 in the offence section of s. 471. The learned High Court Judge was correct to say that there is "no presumption or inference arises in this provision that in using a forged document the person is said to have forged the document." However, the learned High Court Judge had erroneously rejected the application of s. 467 in the context of s. 471.

[37] Although s. 467 begins with "whoever forges a document", that does not mean that creates another offence of forging the document in question when the section is used for a charge under s. 471. As explained earlier, the phrase "as if he had forged such document" is related to identifying which punishment section is to be applied for the offence under s. 471. This is because s. 471 stated clearly that the convicted person "shall be punished in the same manner as if he had forged such document." A charge for an offence under s. 471 that provides for punishment under s. 467 does not tantamount to a misjoinder because the reference to s. 467 is solely for the purpose of the punishment to be applied.

[38] The appellants' counsel also cited the case Tan Kar Loo v. PP [2012] CLJU 1122; [2012] 1 LNS 1122; [2012] MLRHU 1089, HC, wherein the learned High Court Judge followed the reasoning of Chung Onn (supra). This case carries no weight as this court has rejected the legal proposition of Chung Onn, and explained the error committed by the learned High Court Judge in that case. The appellants' counsel also cited the case Tan Phak Tin v. PP [2004] 8 CLJ 659; [2004] 2 MLRH 826, HC. This court finds this case was inaptly cited because the issue in that case is not relevant here. The issue in that case was related to forgery for the purpose of cheating under s. 468 of the Penal Code.

[39] The appellants' counsel raised an argument that Form 14A (exh. P41A) by itself could not be construed as "valuable security" within the envisaged meaning of s. 30 of the Penal Code because the Form 14A alone could not bear any legal right to effect a transfer of a property from one person to another person without being accompanied by other documents, such as the original title deed, copies of the identity card of the transferor and transferee, payment receipts of taxes, discharge documents and etc.

[40] Although the submission appeals to be ingenious, the fact is that the law recognises Form 14A as the instrument of a legal transfer under the NLC, and likewise, the Stamp Act 1949 also recognises that instrument (Form 14A) as chargeable with stamp duty under item 32 of the First Schedule. The other documents that accompany Form 14A are merely secondary to effect a legal transfer. Therefore, this submission is unsustainable in law and in fact.

[41] The appellants' counsel also argued the charge against the second appellant read together with s. 109 of the Penal Code would be tantamount to duplicity of charges. Again, this submission does not hold water because the punishment section for the offence convicted (s. 471) was still as provided within s. 471. As alluded and explained above, s. 467 was relevant only to the extent of the punishment. Therefore, there was no duplicity of charges in any manner.

[42] The appellants' counsel further raised the fact that the appellants were not present at the land office to present the Form 14A (exh. P41A), therefore, it was not proved that the appellants had used the document in question. This submission goes to the root of proving the offence which is outside the purview of the revision. The review here has to be confined to the question of law raised. Any issue raised should not encroach into the finding of facts and evidence before the trial court.

Conclusion

[44] The punishment section for the offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code would depend on the nature of the document that was used as a genuine document. If the document in question falls within those documents mentioned in s. 466, then the punishment in s. 466 shall be applicable. Likewise, if the document in question falls within those specific classes of documents in s. 467, then the punishment in s. 467 shall be applicable. If the document in question does not fall within either s. 466 or s. 467, then the appropriate punishment section would be s. 465 by the interpretation of the phrase "makes a false document" in s. 463 to include the forging of a document within the phrase "as if he had forged such document" in s. 471 of the Penal Code.

[45] In the present case, based on the above reasoning, this court, in a unanimous decision, finds the charge was properly framed, and the charge was not defective, wrong, or illegal in law. Hence, this court dismisses the revision and maintains the impugned decision dated 10 July 2023 as the correct decision of the Court of Appeal.
